Listed on Georgia's Colonial Coast Birding Trail is Crooked River State Park boasting 500-acres blanketed with several habitats including pine Flatwoods, salt marsh and maritime forest. Look for warblers during spring and fall migration and for nesting osprey in spring and summer. Migrating shorebirds are here in early to mid-summer.

Also on the state birding trail is beautiful Cumberland Island National Seashore. This largely undeveloped barrier island is accessible by ferry from St Marys. Extensive salt marshes border the island to the west and 17 miles of pristine white sand beaches border on the east. Over 322 species of birds have been seen on the island. Look for peregrine falcons during fall migration. Painted buntings are common in summer and shorebirds are commonly seen all year.

Woodbine and White Oak are home to 6+ miles of the Georgia Coast Rail Trail providing a natural bird sanctuary with shelter, protection, water, food and nesting sites for many bird species. The rail trail offers a beautiful, scenic experience and the chance for 'Twitchers' to add to their list of sightings and is located on the eastern United States bird migratory flyway. More than 200 bluebird nesting boxes are located throughout Woodbine and around Kingsland.
